

CSWC Operational Period Summary

1800 April 12 2016 to 0600 April 13 2016

Heavy Rescue-Fire 1 was the first of at least three such apparatus built for Cal OES in the 1980s. It was a Ford C8000 with a Fabco 4x4 retrofit and a 1983 Westates body. It had a 1000-GPM pump, a 567-gallon water tank, and carried 50 gallons of foam. The photo is dated July 30, 1984, and was taken in front of Sacramento Fire Station 4.

Navy Secretary to Marines: Women in Combat Is Irreversible

(ABC News) Navy Secretary Ray Mabus had a simple message for 1,500 Marines and sailors: The decision to let women compete for all military combat positions is as irreversible as earlier edicts to integrate blacks and allow gays and lesbians to openly serve. It was Mabus' third visit to a major Marine Corps base to explain the issue to rank-and-file audiences since Defense Secretary Ash Carter said in December that all combat positions would be open to women. Mabus repeatedly emphasized that standards won't be lowered. "Marines, we're past the decision now. The secretary of defense has made the decision. Now we're into implementing," he said Tuesday at Camp Pendleton in California. Marine Corps leaders had sought to keep certain infantry and combat jobs closed to women, citing studies showing combined-gender units are not as effective as male-only units. Carter, backed by Mabus, overruled them. Since December, the military services have put together plans outlining how they will integrate women into male-only units. Gunnery Sgt. Janet Marrufo, 31, said Mabus' simple message was effective. "It was important for Marines to hear out in the open, and let them know officially that it's a full change and that this is happening," said Marrufo, who has been a Marine for 12 years. "I think some Marines were unclear about that at first but he cleared the air."

Syria conflict: Aleppo fighting threatens peace talks

(BBC) The UN is to start a new round of indirect talks in Geneva aimed at ending the conflict in Syria. UN special envoy Staffan de Mistura has warned that there is an urgent need for the government and opposition to take steps towards a political transition. But correspondents say the outlook is bleak, with fighting in Aleppo province threatening a fragile six-week truce. Meanwhile parliamentary polls, dismissed by the opposition as a sham, are under way in government-held areas. Russia, a staunch ally of President Bashar al-Assad, has said the vote does not go against the peace talks and is line with the constitution. But the opposition and its backers say the elections are illegitimate and provocative. Some 3,500 candidates are standing in the polls, which are being held in about a third of the country's territory where about 60% of the population lives. Members of the main Syrian opposition umbrella group, the High Negotiations Committee (HNC), arrived in Geneva on Tuesday ahead of the start of the third round of "proximity" talks since January. Government representatives have said they will not join them until Friday. After meeting Iranian Deputy Foreign Minister Hossein Amir-Abdollahian in Tehran on Tuesday, Mr de Mistura said he wanted this round to be "quite concrete". It was now "crucially urgent", he added, that both sides agreed on a political process that a UN Security Council resolution passed in December envisages will lead to the formation of a transitional government, a new constitution and elections. The veteran Swedish-Italian diplomat also stressed that it was very important that the cessation of hostilities brokered by the US and Russia continued and that humanitarian aid was allowed to reach every Syrian. The US permanent representative to the UN, Samantha Power, later warned that the escalation of violence in Aleppo province threatened to derail the talks. Samantha Power said the US, which backs the opposition, was "very alarmed" at the government's announcement of a major offensive south of the city of Aleppo and that Russia needed to "get the regime back with the programme".

SITUATION SUMMARY

Cal OES Tribal and Southern Region Significant Activity

- The Los Coyotes Tribe, San Diego County, experienced negative impacts to their reservation due to the recent rains. The main issue is their main roadway, in and out of the reservation, has been eroded. Patchwork has been completed by the Tribe, however, this is temporary.
- Tribal Assistance Coordination Conference Calls began today with FEMA, Los Coyotes Tribe, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Cal OES Southern Region, Cal OES Tribal Office, and San Diego County OES. These coordination calls will continue over the next few days.
- The Tribe has requested an engineer to assess the road, which the Army Corps of Engineers will provide. School buses are unable to drive the road until an engineer says the road is stable to drive on at least one side.
- Cal OES Tribal Office and Southern Region will continue to monitor.

Weather of Concern

Northern California

- A front will come into Northern California this afternoon and linger into the evening. Wind, widespread rain, and mountain snow can be expected.
- Snow levels will lower down to 3,000 feet both tonight and Thursday night with the heaviest snow and rain expected tonight through Thursday morning.

Southern California

- A vigorous upper level low pressure system will dive southward across Nevada Thursday into Friday, with strengthening northwest to north winds developing across a large portion of Southwest California.
- The strongest winds are expected to occur Thursday afternoon into Friday morning when damaging wind gusts of 50 to 70 mph will be possible across the mountains and Antelope Valley. Gusts between 40 and 60 mph can be anticipated across Los Angeles and Ventura Counties.
